

Daily Journal

By traderjim · May 13, 2022

TL;DR

In this daily journal entry, the author reflects on their trading habits, expressing concern about making too many trades and the need to be more selective, particularly with high-priced stocks. Despite consistently making good trades, they acknowledge an increase in bad trades as well.

- I think I'm trading too much again.
- Need to be pickier with my setup.
- Especially around higher priced stocks that have a large ranger or chop.
- I am making good trades consistantly, I'm just making more bad trades consistantly as well.

FAQ

What is the main concern of the author?

The author is concerned about trading too much and making more bad trades than good ones.

What does the author plan to do about their trading habits?

The author intends to be pickier with their trading setups, especially with higher-priced stocks.

How does the author feel about their trading performance?

The author feels they are making good trades consistently but are also experiencing a rise in bad trades.

What type of stocks is the author focusing on?

The author is particularly focusing on higher-priced stocks that exhibit a large range or choppy behavior.

Is the author satisfied with their trading results?

While the author is making good trades, they are not fully satisfied due to the increasing number of bad trades.